

YOU

(e – minor)

1. ^e You determine furniture and clothes, ^C and prefer cacti to roses,
^D your flashy fashion shall cause a stir. ^A
- ^e When I sit to watch football, ^C you decide your girlfriends to call ^D with a loudness, that can hurt. ^A
2. At evening dress presentation you force me without hesitation to decide, which outfit should be the best. `cause we`re going to miss another meeting.
I sit restless in my chair, sweating,
By your irritable mood I feel depressed.

Interlude: ^e And when Mum in law appears, ^G she cleans my study despite my tears
^D and announces “Under quarantine!”. ^A

^e When she spreads herself with joy, able to command us and to employ, ^G
^A I prefer the cellar and drink wine. ^H

3. I often envy the bachelors, not disturbed by telephones and family wars,
I think, they are kissed by the luck. draw their strength from their own source.
Widowers, loners, bachelors
No one cares about dust and fug.

Interlude: When you rummage through all the shops examining all the pants and tops,
and if you ignore the account, you get on the sellers nerve combing through the shop with verve, then I want to sink into the ground.

4. God punished the man with lifelong marriage, `cause he just didn`t have the courage to withstand the red apple and his wife. he cannot rebel or flee.
So now he has to agree,
He is forced to adjust his life.
